Clarence Paul Biography by Ed Hogan

Motown producer/songwriter Clarence Paul has an enviable list of hits to his credit, including classic sides by Stevie Wonder, the Temptations, the Marvelettes, and Marvin Gaye. Paul's musical roots run deep, as his father and brother were singers. Born Clarence Pauling on March 19, 1928, in Winston-Salem, NC, he began singing gospel music in North Carolina churches with his brother Lowman Pauling, with whom he formed the Royal Sons. After Clarence left, the group later became the "5" Royales (the number one R&B hit "Baby Don't Do It," the double-sided hit "Help Me Somebody," number one R&B) b/w "Crazy, Crazy, Crazy," number five R&B). During the '50s, Pauling sang with the gospel groups the Coleman Brothers and Wings Over Jordan. He served in the U.S. Army during the Korean War. When his stint was over, he returned to the States and began recording secular sides for various record labels including Federal, Roulette, and Hannover. To avoid confusion with his brother who had also begun recording secular songs, he shorted his name to Clarence Paul. Some his releases includes the single "I'm in Love Again" and "Operation Breadbasket" (by Clarence Paul and the Members on Chi-Sound). Becoming a songwriter, Paul co-wrote "I Need Your Lovin" with Will Jennings and Ardra Woods, a 1959 number 14 R&B hit for singer Roy Hamilton.

Relocating to Detroit, MI, in the early '60s, Paul met a pre-stardom Stevie Wonder (he was still only known as Stevland Morris). Those close to their relationship say that Paul and Wonder were like father and son and later when Wonder began having hits, he'd accompany him on tour. He would teach Wonder vocal techniques and standards like "Masquerade." He brought the multi-talented preteen to the attention of Motown Records founder Berry Gordy who signed Wonder to Motown subsidiary Tamla Records in 1961.

Paul was made a Motown staff producer/songwriter and assisted A&R head Mickey Stevenson. The duo produced 13-year-old Stevie Wonder's first single, "Thank You (For Loving Me All the Way)" -- an ode to his mother in November 1962. The harmonica-flavored hit "Fingertips, Pt. 2" (written by Paul and Henry Cosby) originally on his LP The Jazz Soul of Little Stevie Wonder held the number one R&B spot for six weeks and the number one pop spot for three weeks on Billboard's charts in summer 1963. More Paul/Wonder hits are the number nine R&B hit "Hey Love" (Wonder/Paul/Morris Broadnax) -- later a 1992 pop hit for R. Kelly -- and "Wondering" ((Paul/Joey Di Benedetto). Stevenson and Paul produced and co-wrote "Hitch Hike" with Marvin Gaye, a number 12 R&B hit in early 1963, as well as Gaye's double-sided hit with Mary Wells, "What's the Matter With You Baby" b/w "Once Upon a Time" (Paul/Stevenson/Barney Ales/Dave Hamilton). Hits for Martha Reeves and the Vandellas were "You've Been in Love Too Long" (Paul/Stevenson/Ivy Hunter) and the charting B-side of their hit "Love (Makes Me Do Foolish Things)."

Wonder would often rearrange non-Motown songs, particularly those of singer/songwriter Bob Dylan. Choosing Dylan's "Blowin' in the Wind," he and Paul collaborated on the track with Paul being heard giving urging vocal riffs. Motown was skeptical about the success of the track, but due in part to Paul's lobbying efforts it was released. "Blowin' in the Wind" went to number one R&B, number nine pop in summer 1966. On the flip side of "Blowin..." was the radio-aired B-side "Aint That Asking for Trouble" (check out the "comin'-to-get-cha!" bass line of 2000 Rock & Roll Hall of Fame inductee James Jamerson) (Paul/Wonder/Sylvia Moy). Another key Paul/Wonder track was "I'm Wondering," a number four R&B hit from fall 1967. One unreleased treasure maybe a 1963 recording called "Monkey Talk" that's described as a Ramsey Lewis-type jam (similar to Lewis' cover of Dobie Gray's "The in Crowd" that features Paul, Wonder, arranger Johnny Allen, and Motown pianist Earl Van Dyke.

The smooth "Until You Come Back to Me (That's What I'm Going to Do)" (Wonder/Paul/Broadnax) was originally recorded by Wonder in 1967 but wasn't released until it was included on his 1976 two-record greatest-hits set Anthology. Some believe co-writer Morris Broadnax may have played the song for Aretha

Franklin in 1967. Wonder played her the song in 1973. Her version of "Until You Come Back to Me (That's What I'm Going Do)" went gold, hitting number one R&B, number three pop in early 1974. The song has also been recorded by Johnny Mathis and Deniece Williams (on That's What Friends Are For), Basia, and Miki Howard, among others. Wonder, Paul, and Broadnax also co-wrote "Just a Little Misunderstanding," a 1966 hit for the Contours.

Paul continued to nurture young, developing talent at Motown, including synth pioneer/singer/songwriter Ronnie McNeir (his 1976 LP Love's Comin' Down). During the late '70s, Paul left Motown to become A&R head of Mickey Stevenson's newly launched Venture Records.

On May 6, 1995, Clarence Paul died after a short illness in Los Angeles with Stevie Wonder at his bedside. His body was returned to Winston-Salem, NC, where it was buried next to the body of his brother Lowman.

Clarence Paul-related releases are The Four Tops-Anthology, Mary Wells-The Ultimate Collection, The Very Best of the Contours, Motown Celebrates Sinatra, The Best of Sparks, and Motown Milestones: Motown Meets the Beatles.

Clarence Paul

Early life and career

Born in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, United States, Paul was the son of Lowman Pauling and Arsula Price.^[1] His brother was guitarist/songwriter Lowman Pauling Jr.^[1] The two brothers co-founded The "5" Royales singing group.^[2] Their father was a coal miner in Bluefield, West Virginia, where the brothers listened to country music on the town's only radio station. In Winston-Salem, the brothers formed the gospel group, the Royal Sons Quintet, later to become The "5" Royales. Paul dropped the "ing" from his last name after moving to Detroit in the 1950s, so he would not to be confused with his older brother.

Writing and production career

In 1958, he had one of his first major songwriting credits. He co-wrote and recorded "I Need Your Lovin" for the Hanover label.^[3] It was covered less than a year later, in 1959, and became a number-14 R&B hit for Roy Hamilton. His other notable songs included "A Place in the Sun", "Hey, Love", and "Until You Come Back to Me".^[4]

At Motown, he gained fame as Stevie Wonder's mentor and main producer, during Wonder's teenage years.^[5] He co-wrote Wonder's first hit song, "Fingertips" (1963).^[5] He also sang backup vocals on Wonder's top-ten version of Bob Dylan's "Blowin' in the Wind", and Wonder's version of "Funny How Time Slips Away". Paul also produced early Temptations records and wrote/co-wrote such hits as "Until You Come Back to Me (That's What I'm Gonna Do)" originally for Wonder, and later given to Aretha Franklin who made it a #1 hit, and "Hitch Hike" for Marvin Gaye, later covered by The Rolling Stones, and others. Paul relocated from Detroit to Los Angeles in the early 1970s.

Later life

Paul retired to Las Vegas, Nevada. He died of complications of heart disease and diabetes, at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles, California on May 6, 1995, at the age of 67.^[5]
